Thanks to those who took time to comment on my last newsletter. I value your opinions.

I can only hope that you read my newsletter of March 25th. The following makes more sense if it is taken in the context of my view that we are in the midst of the pivotal juncture in human history. I believe it is important to face that reality; it is even more important to make sure the outcome benefits all inhabitants of this planet.

Several years ago, I was going through a divorce recovery class. The teacher stressed forgiveness as a critical piece of healing. "Forgive, but do not forget. For it is by remembering that you gain wisdom." I went through every relationship with which I was struggling, with which I had struggled in past years. It was not until I forgave everyone that I was able to move on with my life. And yes, I tucked away the lesson that I had learned from every valuable experience.

In a similar vein, forgiveness is a prerequisite for moving forward to heal this planet. Ask yourself how many of your personal problems, how many of the world's problems stem from holding onto anger, hurt, and injustice. Ask yourself how many problems could be solved by letting go of enmity, blame, bitterness, resentment, disapproval, judgment, and prejudice.

I see age-old anger in the faces of the Middle East. I see anger in the faces of those who are the victims of crime, of terrorist attack. I see hurt in those whose relationships have not worked, in those from broken homes, in those who have been abused. I see injustice in the faces of the hungry. I don't have to look far to find some who has some grievance.

The great religions all teach that we should forgive. We have modern examples like Nelson Mandella and Gandhi who forgave, forgave those who opposed them, forgave those who abused them. Jesus forgave those who put him to death.

(The feeling I have as I write these words is one of wonder and awe at their power. I see this first step so clearly. Yes it is hard, but it is so cleansing, so unburdening, so profound.)

I want to suggest that we move beyond those with whom we are in contact, or have have been in past contact . We must forgive our current world leaders. Be they elected or dictators, they are only men and women like you and me. Regardless of how just or unjust, most of them believe they are doing the "right thing." And while we are about it, let's forgive the leaders of the past five hundred thousand years who have allowed us to slip into this world situation. And while we are at it let's forgive our ancestors for allowing them to rule unjustly. Most importantly, let's forgive ourselves for allowing the current situation to take place. After all, we are responsible for everything that happens to us.

We must also forgive corporate executives, and all others, whose measure of self-worth is money. And forgive those who use money to purchase power. They are, after all, only men and women. And forgive those whose focus in life is to accumulate "stuff." And forgive those who, for any one of a whole variety of reasons, defile our land, water, and air. And forgive those who, in their arrogance, deem it their right to use up our land and natural resources, resources designed for many generations. And forgive those who develop all manner of terrible weapons. And forgive those who persecute and make war on others in the name of religion, philosophy, economics, and/or fear.

In short, we must forgive all who put their interests before those of their brothers and sisters, their fellow inhabitants of this planet. If we will but listen to them, extraterrestrials are teaching us a form of love practiced by the masters: To see that which another needs, and to give it to him or her before they even know they need it.

I believe a critical part of this process is to recognize that there are non-human conscious life forms who are much wiser than you or me, beings who have accumulated far greater experiences. Be they mortals from another planet, the celestials who attend to us, or the divinity who created us, I believe it behooves us to recognize their higher consciousness, their "spirituality." Remember, it is our arrogance that leads us to thinking we know it all, that keeps us making the same mistakes over, and over.

In my next letter, I will talk about the crucial step that we must take if we are to save not only ourselves, but this world.

The Cosmic Paradigm Network

The views presented above show that we can take steps to respond to the current world crisis. Where do you choose to position yourself at this the pivotal juncture of human history? Will you join with others who are awakening, join with them to use a spiritual consciousness to transform this planet to a place of beauty, peace, and abundance for all? We have been assured that when we reach a critical mass -- not that many people really -- the transformation will be swift and sure. The Cosmic Paradigm Network is dedicated to assisting the positive transformation of this planet. Join us at www.cosmicparadigm.com.

In Truth and Love,

Mark
